EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

The objective of the South African Government is to use major infrastructure projects as vehicles to enhance economic development, growth, job creation and to address past inequalities and imbalances – most notably in socio-economic development (SED). However, infrastructure providers have experienced serious challenges, at project levels, with regard to translating governmental objectives into measureable performance indicators and ensuring reporting of credible achievements.

Infrastructure investment decisions often focus more on the physical solution and not so much on the social outcome of such investments. The general focus is on the effective operation of new infrastructure and facilities that will be provided. The social outcome of such investments – with regard to aspects such as the contribution to governmental and sustainable development objectives – does not always get the necessary attention.

In a bid to ensure that specific socio-economic development (SED) objectives are met over and above the normal technical, financial and legal cornerstones of the PPP process. The KZN Government seeks to adopt an innovative process to translate Government's objectives into measureable performance indicators so that these could be entrenched into contractual obligations, and the commitment of the Concessionaire could be fostered.

The KwaZulu-Natal Provincial policies have shifted towards empowering historically disadvantaged people. The policy's intention is reflected in the resolutions of the KZN Procurement Indaba which was held in August 2015. Its intention being, to advance radical economic transformation through aggressive participation targets. The resolution therefore targeted procurement of 35% to black youth and 30% to black women, 5% to people with disabilities and 10% to military veterans.

PPPs are a good mechanism to advance the participation of SME's in the Province's procurement of goods and services. However, PPPs in South Africa and in the Province are still viewed as complex transactions and procurement methods which require specialised skills to undertake. As a result, very few Small Medium Enterprise are aware of the opportunities available to participate in the PPP market or ways in which to take advantage of the vast opportunities available in the PPP space. The summit therefore seeks to bridge this gap and create awareness on PPPs thus making it more accessible to SMME's who would like to participate in PPPs.
